Orange County brings back program for at-risk youth

By Latasha Coshott

tribune@triangletribune.com

DURHAM - Triangle Residential Options for Youth (TROSA) is planning to bring back a program for at-risk youth.

TROSA's Building Futures program provided vocational training and counseling at TROSA. Summerlin has earned a position of leadership in the community. Many of his most important portraits and cultural scenes remain in private collections; few museums have had the opportunity to acquire his work. Motley's scenes of life in the African-American community, often in his native Chicago, depict a parallel universe of labor and leisure. Significant works will be on view together for the first time. The exhibition will run through May 11.

Motley J. (1891-1982) was born in New Orleans and lived and worked in the Oilfield for the first 20 years of his life. In the mid-20th century, he migrated to Chicago, where he lived and worked until his death in 1982. His work is characterized by its detailed, realistic depiction of the African-American experience in the Oilfield, including the lives of oil workers, their families, and the communities they built.

TROSA opens thrift and frame store at Carter St. (By Michael L. Thomas)

TROSA is free of charge to people who are dependent on methamphetamine when training and counseling at TROSA. Summerlin has continued to provide activities for the young ladies as well as funds for the home. The students were housed at Durham from Oxford and given the opportunity to work in the program. They became actively involved in the community while a variety of services and other activities showed them to be most excited in shopping for jewelry. The primary purpose of the exhibit was to bring together an organized group of artists whose work-loads are members of the graduate chapter of Alpha Pi Alpha Fraternity, to support the fut-ure when called upon. In addition, the chapter sup-ports projects that benefit the community such as the Duke Children’s Health Center (tickle call), the Durham Crisis Shelter, Scholarship to Children’s Home and the National Council of Women. The Durham Economic Resources Center is an initiative of the TROSA Scholars program, a group of faith and community-based organizations that work collaboratively to end poverty in Durham.

It's a mission to provide work-force development skills, job placement and to eliminate unemployment barriers. The DERC maintains a warehouse of new, nearly brand new merchandise for arbitrations for a small administrative fee. Rose Nolen is president of the Florence Home, the daughter of the late Martin Luther King Jr. The 40 pieces of art were created by students of art teacher Elizabeth Burke Bryant. The exhibit is open to the public.

WAKE COUNTY

Durham, social and public safety leaders from the Wake County Sheriff’s Office and the Raleigh Police Department and Mayor Philip J. Haselton are planning a successful educational programs that WCPSS offers. After a tour of the school, the delegation received an overview of high school alternative programs provided for at-risk students, such as paid and unpaid real world work experiences such as internships and job shadowing. Guidance and counseling for drugs and alcohol abuse will also be provided to students who may need such services.

Caroline said that since their initial inter- view meeting, they had found numer- ous referrals and have begun program

The Triangle Tribune

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 2014 – PAGE 6A

W W W .TRIANGLETRIBUNE.COM

PHOTO/ ALPHABETTES

The Durham Chapter of the Artistic Community recently held a dedication ceremony for a multi-panel portrait of the late President Abraham Lincoln and Martin Luther King Jr. The 40 pieces of artwork were created by students of art teacher Elizabeth Burke Bryant. The exhibit is open to the public.

The Casey Foundation also funds the Durham Community Foundation, a local organization that works to improve the quality of life for people who live and work in Durham. The foundation supports programs that benefit the community such as the Duke Children’s Health Center (tickle call), the Durham Crisis Shelter, Scholarship to Children’s Home and the National Council of Women. The Durham Economic Resources Center is an initiative of the TROSA Scholars program, a group of faith and community-based organizations that work collaboratively to end poverty in Durham.

The primary purpose of the exhibit was to bring together an organized group of artists whose work-loads are members of the graduate chapter of Alpha Pi Alpha Fraternity, to support the fut-ure when called upon. In addition, the chapter sup-ports projects that benefit the community such as the Duke Children’s Health Center (tickle call), the Durham Crisis Shelter, Scholarship to Children’s Home and the National Council of Women. The Durham Economic Resources Center is an initiative of the TROSA Scholars program, a group of faith and community-based organizations that work collaboratively to end poverty in Durham.

It’s a mission to provide work-force development skills, job placement and to eliminate unemployment barriers. The DERC maintains a warehouse of new, nearly brand new merchandise for arbitrations for a small administrative fee. Rose Nolen is president of the Florence Home, the daughter of the late Martin Luther King Jr. The 40 pieces of art were created by students of art teacher Elizabeth Burke Bryant. The exhibit is open to the public.